

SLEW HUSBAND ON COAL BARGE, WOMAN ADMITS

"I Killed Him" She Says,
When Confronted With Dead Body.

FOUND ASLEEP IN PARK.

Murder the Climax of Drunken Fights Between the Couple.

Half a dozen policemen attended by a crowd of excited men scurried about through Corlears Hook Park to-day, sizing up the shivering loungers on the benches. Soon they came to a stout, untidy old woman whose gray hair hung in disorder over her flushed, flabby countenance. She was asleep.

Policeman Crimmins woke her up and dragged her to her feet. Then she was led aboard the coal barge Shamrock No. 1, at the foot of Corlears street. One of the policemen lifted a rubber coat from a sinister looking object on the deck and asked the old woman:

"Do you know who this was?"

"Yes," she replied, with a leer. "That was my husband, Christian Davidson, and I killed him, the old —"

His Head Crushed In.

How she had killed him was plain. The whole left side of his head was crushed in. On the deck near by the body was a three-foot length of broken oar. Trails of blood showed that the crime had been committed in the cabin of the barge and the body had been dragged to the deck.

Probably the murderers meant to throw the corpse of her victim into the river. Something diverted her from her purpose, and she went into the park and slept in a drunken stupor on a bench until the crime was discovered and she was sought.

The Shamrock No. 1, laden with coal, tied up at the foot of Corlears street on Dec. 7. Her cargo was consigned to Benjamin Koronsky, a coal dealer of the neighborhood. Christian Davidson was captain of the barge and lived on it with his wife, Mary. He was sixty years old and she fifty-five, and both drank heavily.

Fought Fiercely.

While Koronsky's men were unloading the coal Davidson and his wife took full advantage of the proximity of cheap saloons. They filled themselves with liquor and fought with bitter invective and fury, striking and biting at each other at times.

Benjamin Koronsky went aboard the barge to-day to arrange for taking off the last of the coal. As he stepped on the deck he saw Capt. Davidson lying motionless close to the companionway leading to the cabin. The sight was one that sent Koronsky's head reeling and he ran to the police station and called up Corlears street. In a minute he found Policeman Crimmins, of the Delancey street station, and told him of the condition of affairs aboard the Shamrock No. 1.

Weapon Nearby.

Crimmins lost no time in boarding the barge. In the mean time he had rapped an alarm with his club and other policemen joined him. A cursory examination showed that old Davidson had been dead for hours, and that one side of his head had been rendered pulplike by repeated blows of the wicked-looking bludgeon that lay by his side.

Leading the way into the foul, dark little cabin, Crimmins questioned Koronsky and learned that the wife of the dead man had not been seen since the discovery of the body. There was no sign of her on the boat. On the floor of the tiny galley back of the cabin Crimmins found two big yellow teeth, part of the recent equipment of the man lying dead on the deck.

There were signs in the galley indicating that the murder had begun there and that the old woman had struck the first blow with force enough to cave in the side of her husband's face and dislodge his teeth.

The depths of the barge were searched without avail. Some one suggested that Mrs. Davidson might be in a saloon some little distance across the park. Inquiries there brought out a tip that she had been seen sitting on a bench in Corlears Hook Park.

She was found without difficulty. In the interval of the time that had elapsed since the killing of her husband she had lost little of the vindictive fury that had driven her to murder. In the Delancey street station-house she became violent and four policemen had trouble in getting her to a cell.

In profane, incoherent surfs and mutterings the miserable old woman told enough to establish that she and her husband had spent most of the night on board the Shamrock No. 1 drinking and fighting. She killed him and dragged his body out to the deck, but could not remain on board with the evidence of her crime so near, so she staggered out into the park and fell into the brief oblivion of alcoholic stupor.

HARRY THAW'S AUNT DIES IN AN ASYLUM

Inmate of Retreat for Insane for Years—Her Case Cited to Help White's Slayer.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 17.—Harriet A. Thaw, eighty-five years old, aunt of Harry K. Thaw, died on Tuesday night at the Friends Asylum for the Insane in Frankford, a suburb. The fact that she was an inmate of the asylum for the insane was used in the second trial of Harry Thaw for the murder of Stanford White, when a defense of insanity was advanced in behalf of Thaw.

The aged woman had been an inmate of the asylum for several years, but the fact was concealed from the public until it was necessary to have it known in order to save the life of the woman's nephew who had been charged with the murder of White.

TUBERCULOSIS DISCOVERED IN TIME TO BE CURED.

The following communication from a reliable business man (name furnished for reference) is but one of the many hundreds of cured cases of tuberculosis on file in Dr. Anderson's office:

"Dear Doctor:—For nearly two years I had been sick. A cough developed and I expelled a vile, dark mucus, sometimes streaked with blood. Pains in my lungs and through my shoulders were sharp and cutting.

I had been under the care of several different physicians, who thumped my chest, and each one gave me a different name, but not one of them recognized that I had the beginning of Consumption. They could not, by thumping my chest, discover or determine to a certainty the nature of my disease, and the scope did not yet reveal any tubercle bacilli.

"For two years I tried every remedy I had ever heard of, but none gave me the slightest benefit. I had grown worse, was short of breath, always anxious, had night sweats, cough no better, had lost flesh and strength, and had given up all hope when my attention was called to your success and many cures of Consumption and other lung diseases, and I decided to consult you as a last resort.

"From the very first I was interested and encouraged. Your complete, thorough examination by your Anderson X-ray light convinced me that you could see into the lungs and could instantly locate my disease. Your methods of scientific breathing, exercise, diet and the soothing inhalation seemed so very reasonable that, although it was new to me, I felt a new hope. I had tried scientific medicines for two years and knew them to be worthless.

"After placing myself in your hands I began to improve and was much better in every way the end of one month. After completing a course of your treatment I was cured absolutely, and have remained a well man, working every day for the past year and a half since. I gained 15 pounds in flesh and am as strong as I ever was." (Name and address furnished for reference.) Dr. Anderson, office at West 22d st., New York, between 24th and 26th ays. Hours:—Truly, 10 to 4 (Sundays, 11 to 2). Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, till 8 o'clock.
